Customer Reviews

When Li Jun is orphaned, she leaves the family who she is indentured too and disguises herself as a boy. She finds work in a fireworks factory and learns how to use the black powder. After seeing posters recruiting Chinese to work on American Railroads, she talks the owners son into taking her on board. Once she arrives in America, the Gold Mountain, she is quickly disappointed by the way Chinese are treated and the poor working conditions. this was a quick fast read. Li Jun's story was fascinating. It was interesting watching her relationship with James progress, especially once he found out she was disguised as a boy. I wish the book had an epilogue, but otherwise, no complaints. Overall, well worth picking up.

I loved the view into the Chinese and Canadian settings during the 1880s. This is a period in history that I've been really curious about, so I enjoyed a chance to read about it, even in a fictional setting. Li Jun is a clever, brave heroine who I found it very easy to root for. She's focused on her goals, but she clearly cares for the people around her. Though there's some romance, it doesn't overtake the story. Li Jun's quest to find her father who had disappeared after becoming a railroad worker kept me guessing all the way until the end. Note: I received a free copy of this book in exchange for my honest review.
