Customer Reviews

It is well known that Dr. Bob Rotella has had several successful careers: as the director of sports psychology at the University of Virginia, as an author of eight best selling books and as a teacher of Americaâ™s most accomplished athletes, especially golfers. While much of his acclaim is in the sports field with the publication of How Champions Think, Dr. Rotella will gain wider recognition and become better known as a psychologist and teacher of all whose dream is to become âœexceptional in their chosen field.â • As a weekend golfer I have enjoyed Bobâ™s previous books and his most recent book, How Champions Think does not disappoint. Bobâ™s prose flows from golfing greats he has coached to his other clients in college basketball to major league baseball. The personal golfing lesson that hit home for me is that âœit is better to love one-putting than to hate three putting.â • This lesson has a deeper meaning for me as I consciously record the number of putts I take in in each round and circling three putts, as if I wish to remember my failures rather than my few one-putt greens. Bobâ™s focus on the positive is throughout How Champions Think but his philosophy is best explained in Chapter Eightâ | Learned Effectiveness: The Virtuous. While other cognitive psychologist like Martin Seligman of the University of Pennsylvania were evolving from âœlearned helplessnessâ • to âœlearned optimism,â • Bob was teaching the practical applications of âœlearned effectivenessâ • to people who want to be exceptional. Bob acknowledges William James as his role model in the field of psychology I believe both Bob and James would also subscribe to Heraclitus viewâ | âœThe content of your character is your choice; day to day what you choose, what you think and what you do is what you become.
