Update: 7/31/2015 I have been intermittent fasting for a month now. My goal was to stop eating at 9pm and start at 6pm the next day. I usually make it between 12 and 16 hours but sometimes get to the full 6pm mark. I have re-listened to the book a few times now and it keeps me motivated. What I learned after 30 days: I used to feel completely helpless to food. I would wake up hungry, grab gas station food with a soda, snack on chips until lunch, get fast food, more soda, fast food for dinner, chips and snacks until bed, more soda and then have snacks by my bed in case I woke up hungry. I would feel a panic if I was running late in the morning because I knew I might not be able to eat until lunch time. I would fear getting sick and feeling absolutely miserable. I tried limiting or stopping soda intake dozens of times only to crash and drink a whole 6-pack. I would try to limit carbs, grains, bread and so on and end up crashing and eating a whole pizza. The first week was hard and I obsessed thinking about food. I wanted soda badly. About 3 days in however I experienced the magical thing all IFers swear happens where you suddenly realize you are not dying a few hours later. I became optimistic and it motivated me a lot. It does happen! I tried straight water fasting previously and always caved by the evening of the 2nd day. As the days passed it just started feeling natural. I would drink some coffee or tea as I felt hungry and I'd say in the 2nd week I experienced the total loss of hunger (fat adaptation I understand) for most of the day. I now know I can go to 6pm without dying, fainting, feeling sick, passing out from blood sugar crashes, headaches or anything else negative.
